§ 7. Composition and Organization in General

The militia generally consists of that of the United States and that of the separate states and is composed of organized and unorganized elements.

The power to provide for "organizing" the militia conferred on congress by the constitution includes the power of deciding who shall compose the militia,⁵⁰ and, where congress makes such decision, the states may not legally make conflicting provisions⁵¹ The Federal Militia Act of 1792 was based on the theory of universal service,⁵² but it never became fully effective,⁵³ and, thereafter, in general, congress confined itself to providing for the organization of a specified number of the militia distributed among the states according to their quota to be trained as directed by congress.⁵⁴

Individual states have organized systems of militia based on local constitutional or statutory provisions differing from each other in many respects,⁵⁵ and the validity of such constitutional or statutory provisions when not in conflict with validly enacted federal statutes has been recognized.⁵⁶ Such a state statutory provision must comply with state constitutional provisions.⁵⁷

Militia of the United States Under the National Defense Act, 32 U.S.C.A. § 1, the militia of the United States consists of all able-bodied male citizens of the United States and all other able-bodied males who have or shall have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and who are between specified ages,⁵⁸ and under such act, as amended June 28, 1947 c 162 § 7, the militia is divided into three classes, the National Guard, as discussed infra § 8, the Naval Militia, as considered infra § 9, and the Unorganized Militia.

State militia The state militia is constituted similarly to the militia of the United States,⁵⁹ according to the constitution and laws of the several states, and is generally divided into an active or organized body, and a reserve or unorganized body,⁶⁰ the latter being composed of all persons liable to military duty not enlisted in the active or organized body.⁶¹ Under some statutes, provision is made for the organization of the reserve or theretofore unorganized militia when necessary.⁶² Members of an organization who were never enlisted by the state may not be regarded as troops or soldiers subject to state authority.⁶³

A statutory provision that persons desirous to organize themselves into a militia company shall first obtain the written consent of the county judge has been construed as merely directory,⁶⁴ and, if the governor approves the application without the certificate of the county judge, the company may be lawfully enrolled as a part of the organized militia.⁶⁵

§ 8. National Guard or Organized Militia

- a In general
- b Plan of organization, composition, and distribution
- c Relation to state and federal governments

a. In General

The National Guard is an organization of the state militia subject to call for federal duty in an emergency, there may also be a state guard or militia organized under provisions of state law.

The National Guard is an organization of the state militia,⁶⁶ which does not become a part of the United States army until congress declares an emergency to exist which demands its services in behalf of the nation.⁶⁷ Provisions of state statutes conferring on the governor the power to organize the militia and to meet emergencies give to the chief executive of the state authority to reorganize the National Guard and to call to his assistance in any contingency that may arise a force sufficient in numbers to safeguard the welfare of the people and provide for their defense.⁶⁸ There is authority for the view that the National Guard of a state does not lose its status as a state organization by a failure of the state to comply with the requirements of congress and of federal executive officials.⁶⁹

Units of the state militia have been organized under special acts.⁷⁰ In some states the organized state militia is regarded as exclusively a state institution when considered in relation to the political divisions of the state,⁷¹ and none of the duties to be performed by it can be regarded as those of the country.⁷²

b. Plan of Organization, Composition, and Distribution

The statutes usually fix the plan of organization, composition, and distribution of militia, including the National Guard

Under the terms of the National Defense Act, 32 USCA § 4, it is provided that the National Guard shall consist of regularly enlisted men who on original enlistment shall be within a specified age group, or who in subsequent enlistments shall not be more than a specified age, organized, armed, and equipped as provided in the statute, and of commissioned officers and warrant officers between certain ages⁷³ Under the act distinct classes of the organized militia have been recognized, namely, those members of the organized militia who compose the National Guard, which is subject to full liability for federal service on the call of the president,⁷⁴ and those who, although members of the organized militia when the act became operative, did not take the oath which is a condition precedent to admission to the National Guard under such act,⁷⁵ the members of the last mentioned class remained subject to the obligations to the United States assumed under earlier statutes⁷⁶

Statutory provisions, varying somewhat in phraseology, but to the general effect that the organization, armament, and discipline of the organized militia in the several states shall be the same as that prescribed for the regular army of the United States, have been enacted from time to time and have received judicial construction,⁷⁷ and, under such statutes, the word "organization" has been construed as referring to distribution of personnel into different branches of the service, such as infantry, cavalry, and artillery, the distribution of personnel within such branches into different units, such as brigades, regiments, and the like, and the distribution of personnel within such branches or units into different ranks,⁷⁸ and the term does not refer to the enlistment of a soldier⁷⁹ Under some statutes the "active militia" may consist of the National Guard and the naval militia⁸⁰

c. Relation to State and Federal Governments

Individuals or units of the National Guard are usually regarded as in the service of the state at all times prior to their formal federalization.

While a member of the National Guard of a particular state has been regarded as a member of the organized militia of the United States,⁸¹ individuals or units of the National Guard are not, generally speaking, regarded as in the service of the United States when in encampment for training purposes,⁸² or when being transported to and from the place of maneuvers with the regular army⁸³ When not in the actual service of the United States members of the militia are not "troops" of the United States⁸⁴

§ 9. — Naval Militia

Naval forces organized pursuant to state statutes have been regarded as part of the state militia.

Naval forces provided for by state statutes have been regarded as part of the state militia,⁸⁵ and, under some state statutes, the naval forces of the state are expressly constituted a part of the organized or active militia.⁸⁶

§ 10. Government and Command Generally; Commander in Chief

The governors of the respective states are commanders-in-chief of the militia at times when the militia is not in the service of the United States, but their authority depends on, and is subject to, limitation by constitutional and statutory provisions.

Although the president of the United States is the commander in chief of the militia of the several states when it is called into the actual service of the United States, as discussed in Army and Navy § 12, at other times the command of the militia in the several states or territories devolves on the gov-

§ 11. Officers

- a. In general
- b Appointment and election; oath
- c. Term of office, resignation and retirement
- d Relief from command, transfer, and dismissal
- e. Powers and duties
- f Pay and allowances

a. In General

Militia officers have been regarded as public officers, and the word "office," as used in this connection, has been construed as equivalent to "commission."

While there is authority for the view that a militia officer is a public officer,⁹² the contrary view has also been taken⁹³ The word "office," as used in connection with the position of a militia officer, has been construed as synonymous with "commission,"⁹⁴ but there is likewise authority to the contrary⁹⁵ The term "militia officers" has in some instances been regarded as synonymous with "volunteer officers"⁹⁶

Adjutant general It has been held that an adjutant general as such is not a commissioned officer, or member, of the National Guard either under the National Defense Act⁹⁷ or under a state statute,⁹⁸ but it has also been held that an adjutant general is an "officer" of the National Guard within the meaning of some statutes⁹⁹ In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the legislature has plenary power to fix the qualifications of the adjutant general.¹

Authority to appoint or elect officers of the National Guard or other militia units is reserved to the states, and both commissioned and noncommissioned officers may and should be appointed in compliance with constitutional and statutory provisions.

Under the federal Constitution the authority to appoint officers for the militia is reserved to the states² Under constitutional or statutory provisions of the several states certain officers may be appointed by the governor,³ with the consent of the senate,⁴ and, where the consent of the senate is required, such consent is necessary in order to render the appointment valid⁵ It has been held that an attempted appointment is ineffective while there is no vacancy in the office to which the attempted appointment related⁶ Recognition of a state guard organization as a unit of the National Guard of the state does not automatically adopt its officers, or confer on them the status of commissioned officers in the National Guard⁷ Under the provisions of some constitutions or statutes militia officers may in some instances be selected by election⁸

Appointment of adjutant general Under some state statutes or constitutions the adjutant general may be appointed by the governor⁹ with the consent of the senate¹⁰ It has been held, however, that the governor's assignment of the adjutant general to duty is not such an official act as must be entered in the executive journal¹¹

Warrant, noncommissioned, and petty officers may and should be appointed in compliance with constitutional and statutory provisions relating thereto¹² Under some statutes it has been held that a minor could be selected as a noncommissioned officer.¹³ A warrant is the proper evidence of the official character of the person holding it¹⁴

Issuance of commission. Ordinarily provision is made that the officers of the National Guard shall be commissioned by the governor,¹⁵ and such a commission is a condition precedent to the right or duty to act as an officer.¹⁶ There is authority for the view that the right to an office, acquired under a valid commission and qualification, cannot be affected by the erroneous issuance of another commission which is void¹⁷ The commission in due form is evidence,¹⁸ prima facie at least,¹⁹ that there has been a compliance with all statutory or constitutional requirements as to the selection of the officer designated The mere fact that there was no indorsement on the commission that the person designated had taken the required oath does not conclusively show that such person was not an officer²⁰

Vacancies Statutes have been enacted providing for the method of filling certain offices in case of vacancies therein²¹ A statutory provision for appointments to fill vacancies for an unexpired term has no application where the office in the state militia becomes vacant on the expiration of a complete term²² On promotion from the ranks to fill a vacancy in a grade higher than that of other officers, no officer is superseded except the one who should normally have been promoted to such higher grade²³

Oath Ordinarily under constitutional or statutory provisions so providing, persons accepting commissions or warrants in the militia are obligated to take an oath of office²⁴ It has been held that a person who is commissioned, and assumes the duties of an officer, but fails to take the oath becomes an officer de facto, and that his authority cannot be questioned by third persons.²⁵

c. Term of Office; Resignation and Retirement

Constitutional or statutory provisions sometimes fix the terms or tenure of militia officers; the commission of a militia officer may be vacated by resignation.

There have been constitutional provisions giving the legislature authority to establish by general law the terms of office of all in the military service of the state,²⁶ and a statute regulating the tenure of officers of the National Guard does not violate a constitutional provision making the governor commander in chief of the military forces of the state²⁷ Fixed terms of years for which commissions or offices are to be held have at times been provided for by constitutions²⁸ or statutes²⁹ The validity of legislation regulating the tenure of office of the adjutant general has been recognized³⁰ Sometimes no fixed term is provided for,³¹ and, under some statutes, officers hold commissions until they reach a specified age³²

Resignation Generally, the commission of an officer in the militia may be vacated by resignation³³ The acceptance of a second commission usually operates as a resignation of the former commission³⁴ An officer who has resigned retains all his powers, and his duties continue until the acceptance of his resignation is in due form communicated to him³⁵ Under early statutes resignation as a method of vacating the office of a noncommissioned officer was recognized, and it was held that a commissioned officer who appointed the noncommissioned officer had the power to accept his resignation³⁶

Retirement Provision is sometimes made by statute for the retirement of an officer of the active militia on reaching a specified age,³⁷ and some statutes so providing are regarded as mandatory³⁸ The validity of such a statute has been upheld,³⁹ but there is also authority for the view that such a statute is violative of a constitutional provision that no commissioned officer shall be removed from office except by the sentence of a court-martial.⁴⁰

d. Relief from Command, Transfer, and Dismissal

The governor may relieve an officer from command or order his transfer but this does not in itself effect his dismissal from his grade or office, the discharge or dismissal of an officer may and should be effected by depriving him of his commission in accordance with statutory provisions.

The governor may in the exercise of the discretion vested in him relieve an officer from command⁴¹ However, deprivation of his command does not constitute removal from office,⁴² nor does the transfer of an officer from his command to a detached officer's list have such effect,⁴³ and an officer retains his grade or office as long as he retains his commission⁴⁴ Withdrawal of federal recognition from an officer of the National Guard of a state does not cancel his commission,⁴⁵ or terminate his status as an officer of state militia,⁴⁶ but it does in substance and effect terminate the status of an officer of the National Guard of the District of Columbia⁴⁷ On induction into the federal army an officer of the National Guard ceases to be a member of the militia⁴⁸ Provisions in the National Defense Act, 32 USCA § 15, relative to inspection of the National Guard have been construed as not contemplating trial of an officer in the ordinary sense as a condition precedent to his elimination⁴⁹

State constitutions and statutes have sometimes imposed limitations on the right of superior authorities to dismiss commissioned officers,⁵⁰ but there is authority for the view that, except as his power is limited by valid legislation, the governor has the power to revoke a commission.⁵¹ Some statutes have made provision for the discharge or dismissal of a commissioned officer of the National Guard who has been absent without leave for a specified period.⁵² Under some enactments, a commissioned officer may be discharged or dismissed on the recommendation of a board appointed to pass on his fitness.⁵³ It has been held that such a board is not judicial in character,⁵⁴ and that its findings may not be reviewed by the courts.⁵⁵ There is, however, authority for the view that the functions of such a board, at least when acting solely under authority of a state statute, is judicial in character,⁵⁶ and that the determinations of the board are reviewable by the courts in times of peace.⁵⁷

Adjutant general. Removal of the adjutant general may and should be effected in compliance with provisions of positive law.⁵⁸

Warrant or noncommissioned officers. Under some state statutes and military regulations promulgated pursuant thereto it has been held that the officer issuing a warrant may return a noncommissioned officer to the ranks on request of the latter's immediate commanding officer without giving the noncommissioned officer notice of the proceedings or affording him a chance to be heard.⁵⁹

In the exercise of military power an officer may do only what is necessary for the proper performance of his duty. Subordinates must obey all lawful orders of superiors.

In the exercise of military power an officer may do only what is necessary for the proper performance of his duty.⁶⁰ It is the duty of subordinate officers to obey the lawful orders of their superiors,⁶¹ and also, according to some authorities, orders which are lawful on their face.⁶² However, there is authority for the view that a subordinate officer is not bound to obey an order which is clearly illegal or unauthorized.⁶³ An adjutant general may not delegate his official duties, involving the exercise of discretion and judgment for the common weal, to the state quartermaster,⁶⁴ and he is not responsible for the governor's omission of duty.⁶⁵

f. Pay and Allowances

An officer of the National Guard or state militia is entitled to such pay and allowances as may be provided for by statute.

An officer is not entitled to pay and allowances where no provision therefor is made by law.⁶⁶ Some constitutional and statutory provisions authorize payment of officers in certain cases,⁶⁷ as where they are in active or actual service,⁶⁸ in aid of the civil authorities,⁶⁹ or during encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises,⁷⁰ and under some Longevity pay Under federal statutes providing that the organized militia of a state which shall engage in actual field or camp service for instruction shall be entitled to receive the same pay to which officers and enlisted men of the regular army are entitled by law, service of a militia officer with a part of the regular army during encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction did not entitle him to longevity pay—Bowie v U.S., 45 Ct. Cl. 42.

provisions the right arises only when the officer is in active service.⁷¹ The rate of pay is usually fixed by law,⁷² or, under statutory authority, by the governor,⁷³ and provision is frequently made in substance that the pay of officers of the militia shall be the same as that of officers of corresponding grades in the regular army.⁷⁴

Under statutes providing for compensation of officers when on duty by order of the governor, appointment of one as colonel and adjutant general of the state by the governor is itself an assignment to duty such as to entitle him to draw the salary of his office without a specific order of the governor placing him on duty,⁷⁵ and the failure of the governor to enter the item in the executive journal, even if that is required by statute, does not deprive the relator of his right to compensation.⁷⁶ Under some statutes the right to compensation from federal funds depended on the calling of the militia into the service of the United States.⁷⁷ Provisions of federal law making certain members of the National Guard ineligible for federal pay except on surrender of government pensions have been construed as not repealed by a subsequent general act relating to militia organization,⁷⁸ and, under the statutory prohibition, it has been held that an officer in the National Guard receiving a pension from the United States cannot, without surrendering his pension, receive benefits extended by the federal government to members of the state militia.⁷⁹

Regimental funds Under some early statutes the regimental paymaster was the custodian of regimental funds.⁸⁰

§ 12. Enlistment or Enrollment of Members, and Qualifications Therefor

- a In general
- b Oath, signature, and contract
- c Age, citizenship, and residence

a. In General

The usual method of joining the militia is by voluntary enlistment

The usual method of becoming a member of the organized militia or National Guard is by voluntary enlistment.⁸¹ Early federal statutes and state statutes conforming thereto provided for the enrollment of citizens liable to the performance of military service, and a legal enrollment was a condition precedent to such liability,⁸² although defects in the enrollment did not necessarily render it invalid.⁸³

Evidence of enlistment or enrollment While the signature of the person whose enlistment is in question is the best evidence of such enlistment,⁸⁴ the enlistment may also be proved by showing that he performed service as an enlisted man.⁸⁵ Under early statutes relative to the enrollment of persons subject to military service the insertion of the name of a particular person in any company order or its annexation thereto was evidence of the due enrollment of such person.⁸⁶ The officer who prepared the rolls was presumed to have done his duty,⁸⁷ and the burden of proof to the contrary was imposed on a person who sought to show that he had been enrolled improperly.⁸⁸ The fact that an applicant is a member of the United States Naval Reserve at the time of his enlistment in the National Guard has been held not to render the latter enlistment void.⁸⁹

Enlistment in the militia is contractual in character, and an applicant should sign enlistment papers and take the prescribed oath in compliance with statutory provisions

Provision is generally made for the signing of the enlistment papers or application by the person seeking to become an enlisted man in the militia,⁹⁰ and for the taking of an enlistment oath,⁹¹ and sim-

lar requirements are imposed by the National Defense Act, 32 U.S.C.A. § 123, governing the National Guard.⁹² Ordinarily the taking of the prescribed oath is determinative of the question whether there has been an enlistment,⁹³ but there may be circumstances under which an applicant becomes a militiaman without taking the prescribed oath.⁹⁴

Contract Enlistment in the National Guard or active militia is a contract⁹⁵ and it has been held that the state has no power, by the repeal of the law under which it was entered into and the substitution of another law in its stead, to impose on the other contracting party under the enlistment more onerous conditions and obligations to which he has not given his assent.⁹⁶ An enlistment is regarded as a contract which effects a change of status.⁹⁷

Constitutional and statutory provisions usually determine the extent to which age, citizenship, and residence affect eligibility to enlist in the militia.

Statutory provisions usually fix the ages for enlistment in the militia,⁹⁸ and there is authority for the view that under the National Defense Act the minimum age for enlistment is eighteen years.⁹⁹ Where the consent of the parent or guardian to the enlistment of a minor above the minimum age is not required, as under the National Defense Act, the enlistment, if otherwise regular, is valid and binding without such consent,¹ even as against the parent or guardian.² Under a statute providing that no person under a specified age shall be enlisted without the consent of his parent or guardian, the consent has been regarded as an essential element of a valid enlistment;³ but there is authority for the view that the want of consent merely renders the enlistment voidable by the parent or guardian,⁴ and not void as to the latter.⁵

Where no statutory provision relative to the consent of the parent or guardian is involved and the question turns on a statutory provision that the militia shall consist of persons between specified ages, it has been held that the enlistment of a minor under the minimum age is void as to such minor,⁶ but there is authority for the view that, while such an enlistment is not binding on the parent or guardian,⁷ it is binding on the minor himself.⁸ Under some early statutes the consent of the parent or guardian to the enrollment of a minor above the minimum age for militia duty was not required.⁹

Discharge of minor. There is authority for the view that even since the enactment of the National Defense Act a state court has jurisdiction in times of peace of a proceeding to secure the discharge of a minor from the National Guard of the state,¹⁰ notwithstanding such minor has been enlisted and taken the oath of enlistment in accordance with the provisions of such act.¹¹ A person who has fraudulently misstated his age when enlisting in the National Guard is estopped from obtaining his discharge on his own application.¹² Under early regulations, in the case of the enlistment of a person under eighteen years of age, the governor could order his discharge from a unit of the National Guard to which federal recognition had been extended,¹³ but the commanding officer of such unit had no power to order the discharge.¹⁴ If the minor is under arrest for some military offense the right of the military authorities to hold him is recognized¹⁵

Citizenship In the absence of any statutory authorization an alien is not subject to militia duty,¹⁶ but it has been held that a statute which requires aliens to do militia duty is valid¹⁷

Residence or domicile Under statutes providing that the militia shall consist of United States male citizens "resident within the state" the quoted words are equivalent to "residing within the state,"¹⁸ and do not make domicile within the state a prerequisite to enlistment¹⁹

§ 13. — Term of Service and Discharge

The statutes usually fix the term of enlistment in the militia, and service ordinarily is terminated by the expiration of such enlistment term

The statutes usually fix the term of enlistment in the militia,²⁰ and, in determining whether such term has been served, it has been held, under some provisions, that an enlisted man is not entitled to credit for time other than that during which he renders actual service²¹ The enlistment ordinarily is terminated by the expiration of the enlistment term,²² and the right of the military authorities to give an honorable discharge at the termination of the enlistment period, without the consent of the enlisted man, has been recognized²³ An enlisted man cannot terminate his service at will,²⁴ although the right of the state to put an end to the term of enlistment before it regularly expires has been recognized²⁵

Under some early statutes questions as to the discharge, or the termination of the enlistment, of an enlisted man turned on the matter of residence,²⁶ and the duty or authority to discharge an enlisted man because he was subject to duty in a different organization was recognized²⁷ Under early provisions relating to final discharge and furlough to the reserve, it has been held that a federalized National Guardsman is not on the expiration of his enlistment automatically furloughed to the reserve,²⁸ and that no act or acts done by a company captain, or by the captain and the man, without approval of the war department, can operate as a furlough to the reserve,²⁹ or as a discharge of such enlisted man³⁰

§ 14. — Pay and Allowances

An enlisted man in the militia is entitled only to such pay and allowances as may be prescribed by constitutional and statutory provisions.

An enlisted militiaman has no right to compensation except as payment thereof may be authorized under constitutional or statutory provisions³¹ Under such provisions, however, authorization ordinarily is made for pay and allowances for enlisted members of the militia,³² as when in active serv-ice³³ in aid of the civil authorities,³⁴ or during encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises³⁵ The rate of pay is usually fixed by law,³⁶ and it is sometimes provided that the pay shall be the same as that of an enlisted man of corresponding grade in the regular army.³⁷

§ 15. Disbandment and Consolidation of Organization

Within limitations imposed by federal law, state authorities have power to disband or consolidate militia organizations.

Within such limitations, if any, as may be imposed by provisions of federal law,³⁸ the right of the governor³⁹ or some other duly empowered state authority⁴⁰ to disband militia organizations has been recognized, although the right of the governor has sometimes been limited to specific cases⁴¹ Similarly the right to consolidate and reorganize departments, corps, regiments,⁴² and companies⁴³ in the military service of the state has been recognized in the case of the governor or some other duly empowered state authority⁴⁴ However, even the legislature has no power to disband the complete militia organization formed pursuant to an act of congress.⁴⁵

Effect of disbandment Under some statutes, where his organization is disbanded, a commissioned officer does not lose his rank or commission⁴⁶

Withdrawal of federal recognition Provisions of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, 32 U S C A § 15, relative to inspection with a view to determining what units and individuals should be retained as components of the National Guard should be accorded a liberal construction,⁴⁷ and under such provisions the war department has power summarily to withdraw federal recognition⁴⁸

§ 16. Unauthorized Military Organizations

Within limitations imposed by federal law, the state may forbid the organization as military companies of any bodies other than the regularly organized militia

Unless restrained by their own constitutions, state legislatures may forbid any body of men other than the regularly organized militia to associate themselves together as a military company, or to drill or parade with arms within the limits of the state,⁴⁹ except where such bodies or associations are authorized by acts of congress⁵⁰ Formation of privately organized armed forces has been held invalid even if attempted for the purpose of suppressing subversive elements⁵¹

§ 17. Arms, Equipments, and Other Supplies

The arms and equipment of the National Guard should conform to those of the regular army, and under state statutes the governor may be authorized to issue necessary orders providing for the arming and equipping of the militia.

Under statutes conferring on the governor the power to organize the militia and to meet emergencies, he has full authority to provide for the proper equipment of the militia,⁵² but under early statutes a member of the militia was required to furnish his own arms and equipments⁵³ Under provisions of federal law, now embodied in 32 U S C A § 31, the National Guard must conform in respect of arms and equipment to the regular army, and state statutes have been enacted to carry out such provisions of federal law⁵⁴ The governor is under a duty to obey a state legislative mandate to issue such orders as may be necessary to make the equipment of the National Guard conform to that prescribed for the regular army,⁵⁵ and consequently also has power to provide for the housing and protection of such equipment⁵⁶

Some statutory provisions impose accountability for supplies and equipment furnished the militia,⁵⁷ such as on the counties in which the property was issued,⁵⁸ or provide for relief to the states, under some circumstances, from accountability for property issued by the United States which has been lost, damaged, destroyed, or become unserviceable.⁵⁹ Statutes have frequently specified the person or officer who is to have the custody and control of arms and other property intended for use by the militia,⁶⁰ and a captain or other commanding officer of a company has been held personally liable for arms and other property issued to his company belonging to the state and to the United States,⁶¹ but under some statutes an officer is not liable where the loss results from casualties of the service in the absence of a finding of liability by a board of survey duly appointed whose findings are approved by the governor.⁶²

The measure of damages in an action on the official bond of an officer of the organized militia who has been made responsible for property of the United States in the possession of a state is the invoice value of arms and equipments lost,⁶³ and in case of injury the amount necessary to restore the injured property to good condition so that it may be used for military purposes.⁶⁴

§ 18. Armories, Drill or Camp Grounds, and Rifle Ranges

- a In general
- b Control and use

a. In General

Statutory provision has been made for obtaining armories for use of the militia, and for selection of officers and employees whose services are required in this connection.

Under state statutes provision may be made for securing buildings for use as armories,⁶⁵ as by renting or taking a lease of such buildings.⁶⁶ Authority is generally conferred on particular officers or boards to act in this connection.⁶⁷

Officers and employees Statutes limiting the terms of office of an armory board need not comply with provisions of the organic law regulating terms of state officers generally, since such provisions are confined to civil offices, and members of an armory board occupy military, rather than civil, office.⁶⁸ Under some statutes the appointment of an armorer is invalid unless approved by the major general or commanding officer of the brigade within whose command the armory is located.⁶⁹ Janitors and armorers are in the military, and not in the civil, service.⁷⁰ It has been held that an armor-

Lessee Certain military organizations incorporated as civic bodies have held as lessees municipal property for armory purposes.⁷²

b. Control and Use

Control of armories ordinarily is vested in particular officers or boards, and the use made thereof must comply with statutory provisions

Under some statutes particular officers or boards are given the power and duty to care for, regulate, and control the armories used for the militia.⁷³ By statute detailed provision is sometimes made as to the use to which armories may be put, and an armory may not be used for a purpose not contemplated by the statute.⁷⁴ In some states under proper regulation by the board in charge, an armory may be used for civic purposes when such use will not interfere with the proper use of the building by the militia,⁷⁵ and the rule has been laid down that the use of an armory for amusement purposes is lawful when it can reasonably be said that the amusements for which it is used are conducive to the efficiency and esprit de corps of the military organization,⁷⁶ even though the general public is permitted to participate⁷⁷ and an admission fee is charged, not for the purpose of making money but of meeting the expenses of the undertaking.⁷⁸

A corporation executing to the state a mortgage on property in behalf of a militia company and obtaining an appropriation from the state in such company's behalf thereby assents to a law making the property subject to the authority of a state board of armory supervisors,⁷⁹ title to armory property conveyed to the state may not be reconveyed by deed of the governor,⁸⁰ and the legal title to such property remains in the state for the use and benefit of the militia.⁸¹

Interference by civil courts. A court of equity will not interfere with the exercise of the duties of the board in charge of armories where the necessity for interference is not clearly apparent,⁸² as where the use to which an armory is being put is not clearly one for nonmilitary purposes.⁸³ However, there is authority for the view that a court may prevent by injunction the use of an armory for nonmilitary purposes,⁸⁴ and may even prevent the use in such a manner as to cause unnecessary injury to the property, although in its general aspects the use is a proper one.⁸⁵

§ 19. Discipline and Training

a In general

b Forms and methods of training

a. In General

Generally speaking, the discipline of the militia should conform to that of the regular army

By article 1 section 8 of the Constitution of the United States congress is authorized to provide for disciplining the militia, but the authority to train the militia according to the discipline prescribed by congress is reserved to the states.⁸⁶ The National Defense Act, 32 USCA § 61, provides, as earlier federal statutes provided, for the conformity of the discipline of the National Guard to the system prescribed for the regular army.⁸⁷ The laws of many of the states have been revised with the view of effecting conformity in discipline to that of the regular army.⁸⁸ Thus, the articles of war have been made applicable to the militia by certain statutes,⁸⁹ but by some statutes they apply to the militia only on certain occasions⁹⁰ Under some statutes the effectiveness of regulations for the government of the militia has been made to depend on the promulgation or the approval of such regulations by a specified officer⁹¹

b Forms and Methods of Training

The forms and methods of training the militia are those prescribed by statute.

Under various statutory provisions, the members of the militia are liable to service for instruction, which may take the form of drills, parades, schools, inspections, encampments, maneuvers, marches, or other exercises⁹² Some statutes prescribe a minimum period for participation by the National Guard in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises,⁹³ and provide for participation of the militia with the regular army in training exercises⁹⁴

Notice or warning Under the old system involving universal service, it was required that a notice or warning of each meeting or parade should be served on the members of the company.⁹⁵ Since liability to military duty has been restricted to a select and volunteer body of organized militia, standing orders or regulations usually prescribe the periods of duty and notices are issued only for special meetings or service.⁹⁶

Regulations. Under some statutes commanding officers are given authority to suppress certain occupations carried on within prescribed limits surrounding encampments,⁹⁷ but under such a statute it has been held that the commanding officer is not authorized to suppress a lawful and harmless business when the same business is permitted within the limits of the encampment⁹⁸

§ 20. — Military Offenses

Military offenses include the various violations of the laws and regulations governing the militia, and are punishable as prescribed by law.

Military offenses within the meaning of some militia laws include the various violations of the laws, rules, regulations, or orders governing the National Guard or organized militia,⁹⁹ and some acts or omissions of members of the militia which are, or have been, regarded as military offenses subject to punishment, are neglect of duty,¹ conduct unbecoming an officer,² insubordination or disobedience,³ nonattendance at drills, parades, and other training exercises,⁴ deficiency in equipment,⁵ and inciting disorders.⁶ Members of the militia have been held free from liability to punishment as for a military offense where the alleged act or omission occurred when they were not on duty or were not subject to military orders⁷ It has been held that military offenses are not criminal offenses⁸

Prosecution and punishment Military offenses are usually triable by military courts, as discussed infra §§ 24, 25, and are not indictable offenses⁹ A state legislature usually has power to provide for the imposition of fines and penalties as a means of enforcing the performance of militia duty¹⁰ On order of the proper authorities the sheriff may, it has been held, detain a militiaman in custody pending his trial on charges by a military court¹¹ Under some early statutes a person who failed to appear at a military drill, review, or muster when duly notified, or who was guilty of some other viola-

Some earlier statutes made the military offenses of members of the organized militia while not in actual military service misdemeanors triable in a court of competent jurisdiction,¹⁴ and this method of determining liability was exclusive¹⁵ Statutory provision was sometimes made for the imposition of a fine by a commanding officer¹⁶ The fact that one was a member of the Naval Reserve at the time of his enlistment in the National Guard has been held not to relieve him from liability for violation of military law¹⁷

21. Service

- a. In general
- b. Calling out militia
- c. Command and civilian control

a. In General

State legislatures may prescribe the service to be rendered by the militia when not in the service of the United States.

It is competent for the legislature to prescribe the services to be rendered by the state militia when not in the service of the United States¹⁸ Some state statutes do not authorize service for the state militia, purely as such, beyond the limits of the state.¹⁹ Federal statutes, forbidding a member of the Naval Reserve to be a member of any other military organization except the Naval Militia, do not automatically deprive a member of the State Guard of his status as such by virtue of the fact that he is assigned to active duty with the navy,²⁰ but such assignment merely suspends his status as a state guardsman²¹

Generally, the authorities in a state may use the militia in times of public disorder or danger and to aid in the enforcement of the laws.

The right of the authorities in a state to use the militia in times of public disorder or danger and to aid in the enforcement of the laws is recognized,²² as to preserve order in times of natural catastrophe, such as floods,²³ to suppress insurrection, as discussed in Insurrection and Sedition § 4, or to put down riots, as considered in the C J S. title Riot, §§ 30-32, also 54 C J p 842 notes 64-73, 82-85. Although ordered out by the governor in aid of the civil authorities in a particular part of the state, the militia has been regarded as being in the service of the state²⁴

Ordinarily the governor has the power and duty to call out the militia in times of public disorder or danger,²⁵ or when there is imminent danger thereof,²⁶ or to aid the civil authorities in the enforcement of law,²⁷ and he may act even without a request from local civil officers in the place where

Construction of statutes

The statute making it obligatory on the governor to call out the militia when the state is threatened with invasion or insurrection or when there exists a riot, mob, unlawful assembly, breach of the peace, or resistance of the execution of laws of the state or imminent danger thereof if in governor's opinion the civil authorities are unable to cope with the situation is inapplicable, in the main, to constitutional and statutory sections which deal with the particular and separate subject of execution of the laws—State v McPhail, 180 So 387, 182 Miss 360.

Breakdown of local enforcement

Where governor unsuccessfully seeks, by representations to, and request of, the local authorities, to secure law enforcement and the condition exists and persists for that length of time which makes it clearly apparent that no dependence is to be placed on the local executive officers and that they either cannot or will not enforce the laws, so that there has been a substantial breakdown of local enforcement, the power and duty of governor arise to send militia, not to supersede the law, but to enforce it—State v McPhail, supra.

the disturbance exists²⁸ The power of the governor in this respect extends to calling out either the organized or the unorganized militia²⁹ The decision of the governor that the condition exists which demands the exercise of his authority is conclusive³⁰ and is not subject to review by the courts³¹ The governor's proclamation calling out the militia need not contain any particular recitals,³² and it is sufficient if it is an order and the facts de hors justify its issuance and execution³³

Authority has sometimes been given to certain civil officers other than the governor to call on the militia to suppress public disorder or to aid in the enforcement of law,³⁴ and the view has been taken that this authority may be exercised when such disorder is threatened³⁵ The decision of an officer duly authorized that a condition which requires the calling out of the militia exists is ordinarily regarded as conclusive as to the existence of such condition³⁶ Some statutes do not recognize the right of local civil officers to issue the call.³⁷

Ordinarily the governor retains command of the militia after it has been called into the service of the state, and usually the militia remains subject to civilian control

Ordinarily, where the governor as commander in chief calls out the militia, he retains command,³⁸ and is not required to place them under the orders of local civil authorities in the territory into which the militia is sent³⁹ However, where local civil officers have exercised the power, sometimes given by statute, to call out the militia, the view has been taken that such officers have exclusive control and direction as to the specific duty or service which is to be performed,⁴⁰ which authority may not be delegated to the officers of the militia,⁴¹ but the officers of the militia have authority to direct the movements of its members in the execution of the orders given by such civil officers⁴²

In time of peace while the civil power is functioning, the military power is subordinate to the civil power, as discussed supra § 3, and military aid to the civil authorities must act within, and in accordance with, the civil law,⁴³ and there is authority for the view that even the governor may not suspend the civil laws or supplant civil authority with military rule at such time⁴⁴ The broad rule has been laid down that the state militia while in active service and in every emergency which arises is subject to the control of the civil authority,⁴⁵ and must act under the civil law⁴⁶

Moreover, the authority of a member of the militia has been defined and limited by the statement that he may exercise such authority as that which a peace officer may exercise,⁴⁷ and only such authority,⁴⁸ and in the performance of his duties a member of the militia may use only such force as is necessary⁴⁹ There is authority for the view that, although martial law has not been declared, a commanding officer may establish reasonable regulations for the protection of life or property.⁵⁰

Strict subordination

The constitutional and statutory provisions regarding enforcement of laws by governor, when taken to-

Making arrest. The authority of a member of the militia to make an arrest in connection with the performance of his duty is recognized,⁵¹ but after the prisoner has been turned over to the civil authorities the militia authorities have no further power over him.⁵²

Seizure, destruction, or use of private property While members of the militia may be authorized under certain circumstances to destroy private property,⁵³ authority to destroy⁵⁴ or to seize⁵⁵ such property does not exist in the absence of an imminent and overwhelming necessity. The right of an officer of the militia to use private property as a muster ground without the consent of the owner has been denied,⁵⁶ but it was held that an inclosed field might be used as a muster ground in the absence of objection on the part of the owner.⁵⁷

§ 22. — Liability of State or Political Divisions for Injuries

Ordinarily neither the state nor a subdivision thereof is liable for injuries caused by the state militia.

It has been held that the state⁵⁸ or a political subdivision thereof in which the militia is employed⁵⁹ is not answerable for injuries to person or property occasioned by the torts or trespasses of the officers or privates of the militia, and that it is for the state, in its sovereign capacity, to determine whether compensation will be made out of its treasury.⁶⁰ Statutes by which the state waives immunity and assumes liability for injuries caused by its officers and agents generally have been construed as not effecting such a waiver and assumption in respect of injuries caused by the state militia.⁶¹

§ 23. Expense of Maintenance

- a. In general
- b. Armories
- c. Arms, equipment, and other supplies
- d. Training, mobilization, and actual service

a. In General

The cost of maintaining the militia is primarily a state charge, although provision may be made for requiring political subdivisions of the state to share the expense, and, under certain conditions, federal aid may be extended.

The cost of maintaining the militia is primarily a state charge,⁶² to be defrayed out of state funds as a necessary expense of government in compliance with statutory provisions.⁶³ Political divisions of the state may also be allowed or required to share in the expense of quartering or maintaining state troops stationed within their respective boundaries,⁶⁴ as where special benefits accrue from the presence of the troops in the political division involved.⁶⁵ Under some statutes the expense of the maintenance of the militia within a county constitutes a charge on the county in the first instance, but the amount paid should be refunded by the state.⁶⁶

Federal statutes have made provision for the use of federal funds for the payment of certain expenses of organizations in the several states, territories, and the District of Columbia, which have become part of the organized militia or National Guard of the United States.⁶⁷ In this connection, it has been held that congress has authority to determine the extent of the aid, support, and assistance which shall be given the National Guard of the various states,⁶⁸ and the terms on which it shall be granted,⁶⁹ and that the right of any state to enjoy such pecuniary aid depends on its compliance with the requirements imposed by the federal statutes and with the regulations issued thereunder⁷⁰

The expense of providing and maintaining armories may be borne by the state or a political subdivision thereof under differing statutory provisions, and the financing of such matters may be intrusted to an armory board or commission

Under some statutes the cost of providing⁷¹ or maintaining⁷² armories for the several organizations of the organized militia or National Guard is placed initially or otherwise on political divisions of the state in which the armories are maintained, or such divisions are authorized to apply their funds to such purposes⁷³. Such allocation of the cost of armories may be made notwithstanding a constitutional provision that taxes shall be equalized and uniform through the state⁷⁴. However, under other statutes or constitutions it has been held that such charges must be borne by the state,⁷⁵ although, even in a state in which legislative power to impose on a political division the duty of maintaining an armory, where merely incidental advantages result to such division, is denied, it has been held that a municipality may donate a site for an armory where part of the building is used for purely municipal

In some jurisdictions, while it has been held that the legislature has no authority to enact a general statute which requires counties to provide armories for the state militia and which makes no provision for a special fund from which the expense may be met,⁷⁷ a local and special statute authorizing a county to issue bonds and to levy a tax to cover the expense of providing an armory, if duly approved by the qualified voters, has been upheld⁷⁸. Under statutes permitting cities to donate land or buildings for armories, it has been held that there is no authority for a lease by a city to a military board of an armory to be used by a National Guard unit for which rent is charged⁷⁹

Under some statutory provisions the financing of construction and maintenance of armories may be handled through armory boards or commissions⁸⁰. So discretion may be conferred on the trustees of an armory to determine within prescribed limits how much should be appropriated toward its maintenance by a municipal board of estimate and apportionment,⁸¹ and the municipal board has no power to refuse to grant the amount requested, within the prescribed limits, if it appears that the money is required for lawful purposes,⁸² although the board may in the first instance pass on the propriety of including certain items in the request,⁸³ and it has authority to refuse appropriations which are excessive or unreasonable in amount for the purposes specified⁸⁴ The fact that the armory trustees erroneously include certain items does not justify rejection of their report in its entirety⁸⁵

In the case of a state armory and the real property connected therewith, title to which is vested in the state, no person or body has authority to incur any expense therefor or in connection therewith except the state itself acting through its duly authorized agent, such as the adjutant general,⁸⁶ and the fact that the county may be obligated by law to reimburse the state for its expenditures does not make the county directly responsible to the creditor,⁸⁷ or render it liable for damages suffered in performance of the contract and allegedly caused by negligence of the agents of the state⁸⁸ A legislative appropriation for service of the militia adjutant general is not broad enough to cover extraordinary repairs to an armory made under direction of the state quartermaster⁸⁹ Under some statutes the amount required for the insurance of armories should be paid out of the general appropriation at the disposal of the state armory board.⁹⁰

Conditions precedent to liability for expenses of providing and maintaining In order to render a political division of the state liable for the expense of providing and maintaining armories there must be a compliance with the conditions or requirements of applicable statutes.⁹¹ A county is not obliged to pay the rent of an armory for an organization whose members have not taken the steps necessary to make it a legal military organization⁹²

Various statutes have made provision for supplying the militia with arms and other equipment The liability for certain expenses as between the state and its political divisions is fixed in accordance with the provisions of state law.

Various statutes have made provision for supplying the militia with arms and other equipment⁹³ Under some statutes, supplies and equipment furnished the militia while it is on duty on the request of a political subdivision of the state such as a municipality is a charge on the state, rather than on the municipality⁹⁴ Under other statutes, the municipality must bear such expense,⁹⁵ and it is for the military officers rather than the city officials to determine when and how expenses shall be incurred by them in aiding the civil authorities of the city⁹⁶ The liability of the municipality for supplies furnished under an order of the military authorities is to be determined by the provisions of the military law or statutes of the state,⁹⁷ rather than by the provisions of the city charter relating to the power of its officers,⁹⁸ and in order to secure payment for supplies furnished it is essential that claimant present a voucher complying with the statutory requirements of the state,⁹⁹ and the fact that the voucher fails to comply with provisions of the city charter affords the municipality no defense¹ Where a complaint seeking collection of such a claim has been dismissed for lack of a proper voucher, plaintiff may subsequently procure a proper voucher and recover thereon.²

tia while in encampments or during maneuvers, or while on actual service for local or state duties

Various statutes provide for the payment of officers and enlisted men while in encampments or during maneuvers.³ It has been held that the expense of a militia contingent during encampment for training purposes may be paid as an "ordinary expense" of the executive department of the state,⁴ but that an appropriation for members of the militia while in federal service does not cover their pay during an encampment when they are not in federal service, but are engaged in training under state auspices.⁵ It has been held within the power of the governor to expend money to quarter men and equipment not on active duty where reasonably necessary as a matter of preparedness.⁶

It has been held that the cost of maintaining the militia while in active service in aid of the civil authorities,⁷ including the pay and subsistence of the members of the militia,⁸ is a charge against the state. Some statutes make the expense a state charge where the militia is called out in aid of the civil authorities by the governor acting in pursuance of his discretionary power,⁹ and this includes the expense of compensation and subsistence of the members of the militia.¹⁰ Under some statutes, where the militia is called out on the order or request of local authorities, the political division concerned is liable for the expense involved.¹¹

After mobilization and pending mustering into the federal service the expense of transportation, maintenance, equipment, pay of troops, etc., may under some statutes be met in the first instance by the state,¹² but the state may recover from the federal government the reasonable expenses of mobilizing the National Guard when ordered to camp for federal service.¹³ The United States is not liable for the payment of persons who are not in the organized service of the state or of the federal government.¹⁴ Under a state statute providing for compensation additional to allowances by the United States army to be paid members of the National Guard under "orders on duty," the latter phrase refers to duties of a local or state character, as in the enforcement of the law or suppression of insurrection,¹⁵ and does not cover services rendered while attending a military school to receive instruction, or a rifle meet, or an encampment for routine practical instructions at or near an army post during a period of field training under authority from the president of the United States.¹⁶ Such state statutes have been construed as limiting use of state funds for payment of National Guardsmen to occasions when the Guard is ordered out for local or state duties,¹⁷ and as prohibiting payment of claims for services rendered at the president's orders and for which congress has provided payment from the federal treasury.¹⁸

§ 24. Military Courts

Violations of military law or regulations by the militia are ordinarily dealt with in military courts; courts of inquiry may be ordered to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation against, any officer or soldier.

Violations of military laws or regulations are now generally dealt with by military courts.¹⁹ Under earlier law there were so-called delinquency courts,²⁰ which were distinguishable from courts-martial.²¹

§ 25. — Courts-Martial

- a In general
- b Convening authority
- c Composition
- d Jurisdiction
- e Proceedings
- f Conviction, sentence, and punishment
- g. Review
- h. Conclusiveness of adjudication

a. In General

A court-martial is a military or naval tribunal having jurisdiction of offenses against the service in which the offender is engaged, and the court exists only temporarily and until the particular object of its creation has been accomplished.

Statutes which have been held valid provide for a system of courts-martial for the state militia³⁰ A court-martial is a military or naval tribunal which has jurisdiction of offenses against the laws of the service, military or naval, in which the offender is engaged³¹ While these tribunals are regarded as courts in certain respects,³² there is authority for the view that they are part of the executive, and not of the judicial, branch of the government,³³ and that they are not affected by state constitutions making provision for certain courts³⁴ or for the creation of other courts by the legislature³⁵ The term "court-martial" does not include a board of officers directed to try a contested election to office in the militia³⁶ The court exists only temporarily, and, when the particular object of its creation has been accomplished, it is dissolved.³⁷

A court-martial should be duly convened by the proper authorities.

A court-martial should be duly convened by the proper authorities³⁸ Under some statutes, a general court-martial may be convened only by orders of the president or the governor,³⁹ but, under early provisions, it was held that a court-martial could not be organized by the sole authority of the governor without an act of the assembly authorizing it,⁴⁰ and, under an early statute which did not contain an express provision as to who should order the court, it was held that the captain of a militia company did not have the authority to order it⁴¹ The order for the court-martial should comply with statutory requirements⁴² It has been held within

An order signed by the adjutant general of state National Guard reciting the appointment of a general court-martial, and stating, among other things, the names of the trial judge advocate and defense counsel, complied with statutory requirement for appointment of a trial judge advocate, and a defense counsel—Wright v White, supra.

the scope of the authority of the adjutant general to prefer charges against a militiaman.⁴³ A court-martial may be convened under state authority for the trial and punishment, in accordance with the federal statutes, of militiamen of the state who refuse or neglect to serve when called into actual service by the governor in pursuance of an order or requisition of the president.⁴⁴

The composition of a court-martial should conform to statutory requirements and it will ordinarily consist of commissioned officers.

Courts-martial are usually composed of commissioned officers.⁴⁵ Where a statute specifies the officers who are to be detailed for service on a court-martial,⁴⁶ the violation of such statute by the detailing of an officer other than as specified will, in the absence of a waiver by accused, render the sentence ineffective.⁴⁷ The statutes usually fix the number of members of a court-martial,⁴⁸ and, when less than the legal number act, the sentence of a court-martial is ineffective.⁴⁹ The right of the appointing officer to relieve a member and to detail another to membership has been recognized.⁵⁰ A temporary disability of one of the members of the court does not, it was held, create a vacancy within the meaning of a statute which authorized the filling of a vacancy in the court.⁵¹

d. Jurisdiction

- (1) In general
- (2) Of offenses

(1) In General

The jurisdiction of courts-martial is special and limited, and they may not assume the functions of the civil courts; courts-martial ordinarily have jurisdiction over the persons of militiamen while in service.

The jurisdiction of courts-martial is special and limited,⁵² and they cannot assume the functions or jurisdiction properly belonging to the civil courts.⁵³ The jurisdiction of a court-martial to try charges against a militia officer is not affected or lost because the reprimand imposed by the sentence of the court is published without notice.⁵⁴

Of persons Ordinarily courts-martial have jurisdiction of members of the militia⁵⁵ while in active service in times of war or public danger,⁵⁶ but the court has no jurisdiction of a person who is not subject to militia duty,⁵⁷ or of a member of the organized militia when he is not actually engaged in military duties, or in acts connected with such duties, and when he is not in uniform.⁵⁸ There is authority for the view that both a court-martial convened under the authority of the United States⁵⁹ and also a court-martial convened under state authority,⁶⁰ may take jurisdiction of the trial of a member of the militia who failed to comply with the call of the president to enter the service of the United States. The fact that a National Guardsman was at the time of his enlistment a member of the United States Naval Reserve does not deprive a military tribunal of power to punish him for a violation of military law committed as a guardsman.⁶¹

(2) Of Offenses

The jurisdiction of courts-martial in times of peace may be limited to military offenses or to criminal offenses noncapital in nature.

A court-martial has jurisdiction of offenses of a military nature,⁶² such as neglect of duty,⁶³ conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman,⁶⁴ and violations of the articles of war, where such articles have been adopted as part of the disciplinary system.⁶⁵ The jurisdiction of a court-martial may be limited in times of peace to offenses of a military nature,⁶⁶ or may exclude capital offenses,⁶⁷ even though embracing serious offenses which are noncapital in character.⁶⁸ Where an offense charged is one cognizable by the civil courts, and a court-martial also has jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the latter is not exclusive but concurrent.⁶⁹

Where a homicide is committed by a militiaman while on duty in time of public danger in an area not declared to be under martial law, the military authorities may, it has been held, detain the prisoner instead of delivering him to the civil authorities, even though the latter may accuse him of murder in the first degree, a capital offense beyond the jurisdiction of a court-martial,⁷⁰ and a court-martial retaining jurisdiction to try the prisoner for manslaughter, an offense within their jurisdiction, may bar further prosecution in the civil courts for the more aggravated offense of first degree murder growing out of the same act.⁷¹ The military authorities do not lose jurisdiction of the prisoner and his offense merely because the exigency occasioning the calling out of the militia passes before he is brought to trial by court-martial.⁷²

The proceedings of a court-martial are regulated by law, and by the rules and customs of the service.

The proceedings of courts-martial are regulated by law, and by the rules and customs of the service.⁷³ A statute requiring publicity of trials has been held inapplicable to trials by courts-martial.⁷⁴

Organization of court The court must be organized in accordance with the law governing it,⁷⁵ and there is authority for the view that no presumption that it has been legally organized will be indulged.⁷⁶ Members of a court-martial ordered for the trial of several complaints against several officers must be sworn for the trial of each complaint.⁷⁷ It has been held that, where the oath to the designated members of a court-martial was administered by a judge advocate who himself had not duly qualified for the duties of his office by taking the required oath, the proceedings and decisions of the court were illegal and invalid ⁷⁸

A judge advocate is usually detailed with a court-martial as an officer whose presence and services are essential to the exercise of its functions ⁷⁹ Accused is entitled to counsel ⁸⁰

Charges and specifications It has been held that the charge, or formal written accusation in court-martial proceedings, need not be drawn with the same degree of particularity as is required in the case of an indictment,⁸¹ although it must be sufficiently clear to inform accused of the offense for which he is to be tried ⁸²

f. Conviction, Sentence, and Punishment

A conviction which includes one recognized offense is sufficient, and the court-martial may impose such punishments as are authorized by the statute, the sentence may be enforced by civil officers or others authorized under the law.

Under a statute it has been held that a formal conviction which includes two alleged offenses, only one of which is actually an offense against the state, is a sufficient conviction on which to hold accused ⁸³ The sentence must be approved as required by law,⁸⁴ and, under some statutes, the officer who ordered the court-martial is the proper officer to approve the sentence ⁸⁵

Punishment. Under some statutes courts-martial may be authorized to sentence offenders to sundry punishments,⁸⁶ such as a fine,⁸⁷ or imprisonment in case of nonpayment of a fine ⁸⁸ Authority to combine two or more forms of punishment in one sentence may be given under statute ⁸⁹

Disposition of fines or forfeitures Fines and forfeitures must be disposed of as provided by statute,⁹⁰ and under some provisions, it has been held that fines collected shall be paid into, or credited to, the military fund of the organization of which the person on whom the fine was imposed is a member ⁹¹

Enforcement of sentence Under some statutes, the sentence of a court-martial, when approved, is ordinarily carried out by the sheriff or other civil officer designated by law on an execution or a warrant issued by the president of the court or some other militia officer ⁹² Some early statutes provided for an action in the civil courts to recover fines imposed by courts-martial⁹³ but under other statutes governing the militia it was held that such an action would not lie ⁹⁴ When judgment of removal is pronounced by a court-martial, it takes effect on the approval of the governor, without further action on his part ⁹⁵

It is the duty of the designated officer to carry out the lawful mandates of courts-martial, and defaults in this respect may render him pecuniarily liable,⁹⁶ but he is not liable for failure to collect fines which the court-martial had no authority to impose ⁹⁷ Under statutes which provide for the execution of a bond by a person appointed to execute the mandates or orders of the court, a voluntary bond given by one designated as collector of fines has been held enforceable ⁹⁸ Where the court was without jurisdiction, its decision does not protect the civil officer who attempts to give it effect ⁹⁹

Ordinarily a sentence of a militia court-martial acting within its jurisdiction and approved by the proper authorities is not open to review by the civil courts

While there is authority for the view that the proceedings and judgment of a court-martial acting within its jurisdiction when approved by competent authority cannot be reviewed by a civil court,² in some jurisdictions, although not in others, such proceedings may be reviewed by certiorari, as discussed in Certiorari § 46. The question whether a court-martial had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person of accused is usually determinable by the civil courts.³

The adjudication of a court-martial may be collaterally attacked where it lacks jurisdiction

Where a court-martial has jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the person of accused, its adjudication cannot be impeached collaterally for irregularities in the proceedings either before or at the time of trial.⁴ However, as courts-martial are courts of special and limited jurisdiction, as discussed supra subdivision d of this section, their judgments may be attacked in collateral proceedings for want of jurisdiction,⁵ and, in order to give a judgment effect, jurisdictional facts must be shown.⁶

§ 26. Incorporation, Organization, Property, and Civil Rights and Liabilities of Organization

Creation of militia districts or incorporation of militia bodies should conform to statutory and constitutional requirements. The funds of a militia organization may be raised by voluntary assessment or otherwise, and in a proper case actions may be brought for or against such organizations.

Under some statutes the right of military or militia organizations to incorporate or to form associations has been recognized.⁷ Incorporation for military purposes has been refused in the case of organizations which are not units of the National Guard or organized militia,⁸ but in the case of an organization which is recognized by the legislature as a military organization authorized to receive arms from the military authorities of the state, incorporation has been allowed.⁹

Under statutes authorizing creation of militia districts, the proper county authority has been held to be vested with discretionary power to determine whether a new district should be created,¹⁰ and, if so, to determine what citizens of the district should be appointed to act as commissioners,¹¹ and, if the territory embraced in the new district otherwise meets the requirements of the law, to decide where its boundary lines should be established.¹² Where proceedings for creation of a new district conform to statutory requirements, they lie within the discretion of the proper county authorities,¹³ such proceedings are regarded as political or legislative rather than legal,¹⁴ and, in the absence of fraud or abuse of discretion in determining questions arising in connection with creation of a militia district in conformity to statute, the determination of the county authorities is final and not open to judicial review.¹⁵ However, the discretion of the county authorities in no way grants them any power to create a militia district failing to conform to statutory requirements,¹⁶ and, where the authorities seek to establish a new district out of part of the territory of an existing district, it is essential that both the territory comprising the new district and that part remaining in the old district shall include within their respective limits the number of male persons liable to militia duty prescribed by statute as essential for a militia district.¹⁷

Property and funds Organization funds are sometimes raised by voluntary assessments, dues, and fines imposed under local by-laws¹⁸ It has been held that members of an incorporated military organization which has no capital stock are not entitled on dissolution to share in the distribution of the corporate property acquired by donations and held only for military purposes¹⁹

Actions There is authority for the view that an unincorporated militia company may be sued as a voluntary association,²⁰ but in order to authorize an action against the treasurer of such a company under a statute authorizing such an action in the case of voluntary associations, it must appear that all the members of the company are liable²¹ Members of an existing incorporated military organization which has no capital stock may not maintain an action for the appointment of a receiver to sell and distribute the proceeds of property acquired by the corporation by donations for military purposes,²² and persons who have ceased to be members of the corporation may not maintain an action to obtain control and management of the affairs and property of such corporation,²³ but it seems that on the refusal or failure of the officials who have control of the property to preserve it, after they have been duly requested, members of the corporation may, under proper allegations, bring an action for the preservation of the property²⁴

§ 27. Civil Status and Liability of Members of Militia

- a In general
- b Liability to civilians
- c Actions
- d Criminal responsibility

a In General

Militiamen may be exempt from civil suit under statute, and, when acting within the limits of their authority, are ordinarily granted immunity from liability for injuries to other militiamen resulting from acts in the performance of military duty

Under some statutes members of the militia are relieved from liability in civil courts for acts while in active service²⁵ Under such a statute it is only a member who is in active service in the sense of having been ordered into active service by the governor who may claim immunity²⁶ A statutory exemption of officers and soldiers of the militia from arrest on civil process does not confer an exemption from suit²⁷

Liability inter se The existence of the military status does not necessarily relieve a member of the militia from liability for injuries to another member arising out of acts in connection with the service,²⁸ although exemption from liability for such acts is sometimes granted by statute.²⁹ If a military officer transcends the limit of his authority, and assumes cognizance of matters not within his jurisdiction, his acts are void and afford no justification to him³⁰ or to those acting under his authority³¹ Moreover, an officer has been held liable for acts done by others pursuant to a void warrant issued by him³² Where, however, a member of the militia has acted within his authority and in good faith, no action against him based on his acts will lie³³ An officer of the organized militia is not liable for a personal injury to another member of the militia where the alleged wrongful act of such officer is not the proximate cause of the injury³⁴

Where, by statute, the duties of a surgeon in the militia have been assimilated to the duties of officers of similar rank in the United States army, such surgeon may not recover from another member of the militia for medical services in connection with injuries sustained by such other member in the line of duty³⁵ Moreover, a member of the volunteer militia cannot maintain an action against an officer for services performed pursuant to a military order given by the latter by direction of a superior officer³⁶ The right of a tort-feasor to rely on his military status as a defense has been denied when nei-

Where a military court has jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter, it is not answerable for its sentence in an action at the suit of a person who claims to have been injured thereby,³⁸ unless it acted corruptly or maliciously,³⁹ and the officers carrying out the sentence of the court are likewise protected.⁴⁰ If, however, the court is without jurisdiction, its members⁴¹ and the officer executing the warrant⁴² are liable to a civil action. National Guard officers have been held immune from suit for exercising their authority to order courts-martial for trial of their inferiors,⁴³ and for putting them under arrest preliminary to trial.⁴⁴

b. Liability to Civilians

- (1) In general
- (2) For execution of orders

(1) In General

The mere status of a militiaman does not exempt one from civil liability in tort or contract toward the general public; but a militiaman is not personally liable on contracts duly executed in his official capacity; nor may he be held in tort for acts lawful for a peace officer.

Generally speaking, the military status of a member of the militia does not exempt him from liability for torts committed by him.⁴⁵ It has been held that a member of the militia is entitled to the immunity afforded peace officers in the performance of their duties,⁴⁶ and to such immunity only,⁴⁷ at least in time of peace while the civil power is functioning.⁴⁸ It has been held that in time of peace the legislature may not confer on the governor power to render members of the militia immune from civil responsibility for wrongs done to citizens,⁴⁹ or grant to them security beyond that accorded the civil officers in whose aid they act.⁵⁰

Where tortious acts of members of the militia were wanton and willful, it has been held that they cannot rely on the defense that plaintiff's violation of a statute regulating the use of roads by motor vehicles was a contributing cause,⁵¹ or that plaintiff is chargeable with contributory negligence.⁵² A person who is injured as the result of the firing of guns at militia exercises is not chargeable with contributory negligence in attending as a spectator where he had no knowledge that it was intended to fire.⁵³

For acts of subordinates Where subordinates act on an order of their superior officer, the superior officer is usually answerable for all acts within the fair scope of the order,⁵⁴ but not for acts unauthorized by the order.⁵⁵ An officer is not liable for acts of members of the militia who are not under his command.⁵⁶

Seizure or destruction of property and trespass. While circumstances may exist which will be a legal justification for the act of a member of the militia in destroying private property,⁵⁷ in the absence of an imminent and overwhelming necessity there is

Reason for rule

It is as essential to the fearless and independent exercise of authority, conferred on officers of the National Guard, to enforce military discipline, that they be free from the apprehension of vexatious suits grounded on their official acts, as it is that a like immunity should be enjoyed by judges of the civil courts.—Wright v White, supra

Different measure of redress

The provision of the articles of war governing National Guard that, if any officer or soldier is refused redress for any wrong by his commanding officer, he may complain to the commanding general in locality and that the general shall examine into complaint and take proper measures for redressing the wrong complained of, prescribes the measure and mode of redress to which an officer is entitled for a wrong done him by his commanding officer, and precludes maintenance of action for malicious prosecution by injured officer against his superiors who instigated and prosecuted a general court-martial against the officer for violation of the articles of war.—Wright v White, supra

no legal justification for the destruction⁵⁸ or seizure⁵⁹ of such property. Moreover, there is authority for the view that an officer of the militia is liable for trespasses on private property by members of his command under his orders,⁶⁰ but in the case of uninclosed land it has been held that until the owner forbade its use for militia purposes he could not hold an officer liable for acts of the members of such officer's command, although such acts would have constituted actionable trespass if they had been forbidden.⁶¹

Contracts Where an officer of the militia makes a contract without authority,⁶² or where he makes a contract without holding himself out expressly or ostensibly as agent,⁶³ his contract imposes on him a personal liability. Ordinarily, however, a member of the militia is not liable personally where he acts in his official capacity.⁶⁴

(2) For Execution of Orders

Generally, a militiaman is not personally liable for acts committed in obedience to orders of his superiors unless such orders are clearly illegal, but some authorities hold that the order of a superior officer does not necessarily constitute legal justification for acts of a militiaman.

The view has been taken that, since it is the duty of a member of the militia to obey the lawful orders of his superiors, he cannot be held personally liable in any civil action for acts done pursuant to such orders, but may set up his superiors' commands in justification thereof and as a complete defense to actions for damages,⁶⁵ and the rule has also been laid down that an order given by a superior officer, which does not expressly and clearly show on its face its own illegality and want of authority, will be a protection against civil actions for acts done in accordance therewith.⁶⁶ However, there is authority for the view that the order of a superior officer does not necessarily constitute legal justification for acts of a member of the militia done pursuant to such order,⁶⁷ as where such order is unlawful in that it attempts to confer greater authority than a member of the militia may lawfully exercise.⁶⁸

If an order is so clearly illegal or unauthorized that any reasonably prudent man ought to recognize the fact, obedience thereto furnishes no excuse for a wrongful act,⁶⁹ even though disobedience may subject the offender to punishment at the hands of a military tribunal.⁷⁰ An officer of the militia who called out his company in violation of a statute, prohibiting the calling out of the militia at certain times, may not avoid liability in an action for the penalty imposed by the statute by showing that he acted by command of a superior officer.⁷¹

Under statute militiamen may be immune from civil suit during periods of active service, but where suit may be brought, general rules as to actions may be applicable.

Under some statutes exemption from service of process in civil suits may be extended to persons engaged in the military service of the state,⁷² or prosecution of suits may be stayed while defendant is in the actual military service of the state,⁷³ and, even in the absence of statute, it has been held that public policy demands the recognition of such exemption.⁷⁴ Where such statutes are ambiguous, they should be construed in favor of the party to whom the law has extended the privilege.⁷⁵ "Civil process," within the meaning of the statutes, has been held to extend to bail writs.⁷⁶

Where there is no immunity from suit, ordinarily the rules governing civil actions generally apply to actions brought against members of the militia.⁷⁷

d. Criminal Responsibility

Militiamen are not criminally responsible for acts committed pursuant to a lawful order of a superior, but may be held for unlawful acts

In general, a member of the militia is criminally liable for an act which is not necessary for the carrying out of his orders or the performance of his duty, where the elements of a criminal offense are present,⁸¹ but it has been held that he is not liable for an act done pursuant to, and within, an order of a superior officer which is fair and lawful on its face.⁸² A statute making it a penal offense for a member of the militia to fire a musket on days of exercise or review except by order of his commanding officer does not render liable a person who, after his organization has been dismissed, fires his musket by order of his commanding officer.⁸³

Jurisdiction and venue When a member of the militia, in time of peace, commits an offense against the laws of a state, the civil courts of the state in which the offense is committed have jurisdiction of the offense,⁸⁴ as where the offense charged is a capital one,⁸⁵ and, in the case of a capital offense where the court has first obtained jurisdiction, it may not be deprived thereof.⁸⁶ Some statutes specifically provide for a change of venue where the application therefor is supported by the required affidavits to the effect that accused member of the militia cannot have a fair and impartial trial in the court in which the prosecution is first begun.⁸⁷

§ 28. Aid to Militiamen and Their Dependents

Militiamen and their dependents are entitled only to such benefits for injuries sustained in service as may be accorded under provisions of law

In the absence of constitutional or statutory provision therefor, a militiaman or his representatives may not recover from the state for his injuries sustained in line of duty,⁸⁸ and statutes providing benefits for militiamen injured or contracting disease in line of duty have been construed as not retroactive so as to permit recovery for injuries occurring before their enactment.⁸⁹ However, under some statutes, provision is made to aid a member of the National Guard who is incapacitated while on duty,⁹⁰ and suitable proceedings will lie to compel the payment of an amount duly appropriated by the legislature for the purpose.⁹¹ Some statutes have been passed for relieving the dependents of those members of the militia who were mustered into the active service of the state.⁹²

Statutes providing that every member of the military forces of the state who shall be wounded or disabled while in its service shall be taken care of, and provided for, at the expense of the state may constitute sufficient authority to empower a proper officer of the state to supply benefits on timely application,⁹³ but they do not, it has been held, evidence a legislative intent to allow those entitled to militia officers for false arrest were within court's jurisdiction even if liability should be contested by answers alleging that defendant officers were acting under orders of governor and under proclamation of martial law—State ex rel O'Connor v District Court in and for Shelby County, 260 N.W. 73, 219 Iowa 1165, 99 A.L.R. 967

Nature and extent of benefits

(1) The phrase "taken care of and provided for" as used in article under which state assumes liability to take care of, and provide for, militiamen, who are wounded or become injured in such service, includes only such reasonably appropriate means and facilities which fall within commonly accepted meaning of phrase such as food, clothing, housing, medicine, medical care, nursing, hospitalization and the like during disability, and excludes loss of time, decreased capacity or total incapacity to earn money, physical or mental pain, or other damage resulting from disability—Dickerson v State, Civ App. 169 S.W.2d 1005, reversed on other grounds State v Dickerson, 174 S.W.2d 244, 141 Tex. 475

(2) The expressions "taken care of" and "provided for" are complementary, the first expression importing actual doing of requisite things and other importing supplying means such benefits to supply the benefits themselves, or to contract with others therefor, and thereafter hold the state liable for the cost or value thereof.⁹⁴ Under some statutes, medical service and compensation may be obtained by members of the National Guard only for injuries sustained while at drill or in the performance of duty ordered by competent authority,⁹⁵ and under such provisions militiamen injured while returning to camp from an authorized leave were not injured in line of duty so as to be entitled to the benefits of the statute.⁹⁶

Under statutes providing for leave of absence for state and municipal employees who are members of the National Guard, Naval Militia, or State Guard without loss of pay, and statutes providing that the salary of such employees shall equal the loss suffered by them while on active duty with the army or navy of the United States, members of the State Guard should, when serving with federal forces, receive the same benefits as members of the National Guard or Naval Militia, even though a member of the State Guard may not as such be ordered into the federal service.⁹⁷ Under such statutes a state guardsman who enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve and was a member of the State Guard at the time when he was called to active duty with the Naval Reserve was entitled to the difference in pay between his county salary and his navy pay, even though he subsequently tendered a resignation from the State Guard which was accepted nunc pro tunc as of the date of call to active duty.⁹⁸

MILK A white fluid secreted by female mammals for the nourishment of their young.¹ The term "milk," when used to indicate the milk that is ordinarily sold in this country for human consumption, generally refers to the milk that comes from cows,² but there are other kinds of milk and the term is remotely defined as meaning the white juice of plants, or the milk in the cocoanut, or that in the Milky-Way.³ "Milk" has been compared with "cream" see 21 C J S p 1037 note 10. Milk has been the subject of many regulatory measures and for specific references see the index to the title Food.

Skimmed milk A generic term⁴ too well understood to admit of any confounding or misunderstanding of its meaning⁵ defined as milk with the cream, or butter fat, extracted,⁶ milk from which its natural cream has been taken in whole or in part.⁷

Exoneration of servant as releasing master

Where both master and servant are joined as defendants a verdict exonerating the servant precludes a verdict against the master,¹⁹ particularly under the doctrine of respondeat superior.^{19 10} However, a verdict exonerating a servant will not preclude a verdict against a master whose own negligence is a proximate cause of the injury.^{19 15}

15. Overruled case

The case of Industrial Tile Co v Home Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n of Tulsa, Okl, 331 P 2d 918, has been overruled prospectively only, the court holding that when erection of building is one continuous project and no general contract is involved and mortgage lien attaches after construction is commenced, mortgage lien is superior to liens of mechanics and materialmen who thereafter enter into separate contracts with owner and furnish labor and material for separate segments of construction

(2) "Vertical merger" is a merger between two firms that have a buyer-seller relationship, that is, one produces a product that is then sold to the other—US v First Nat. Bank of Jackson, DC Miss, 301 F Supp 1161, 1190

58.3. Defined or described

(1) "Product extension merger" is a merger between two firms which are not direct rivals but each of which produces a product that is functionally related either in marketing or in production to the other—US v First Nat. Bank of Jackson, DC Miss, 301 F Supp 1161, 1190

(2) A "product extension merger" is a merger that may enable significant integration in the production, distribution or marketing activities of the merging firms—Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co v White Consol. Industries, Inc., CA Del, 414 F.2d 506, 518

58.4. Defined or described

(1) "Geographic market extension merger" is a merger between two firms that produce same product line but do so in separate geographic markets and are not direct rivals—US v First Nat. Bank of Jackson, DC Miss, 301 F Supp 1161, 1190

58.5. Defined or described

(1) A merger other than horizontal or vertical—US v International Tel & Tel Corp., DC Conn, 306 F Supp 766, 774

(2) A merger is considered conglomerate when the relationship of the merging companies before the merger was not one of buyer and seller or direct competitor—General Foods Corp v FTC, CA, 386 F.2d 936, 944, cert den 88 S.Ct. 1805, 391 U.S. 919, 20 L.Ed.2d 657
